========== Input/Output Operations: ========== Input: ======= : ASCII text of a book (see Note 1) to be converted into a booklet. (You can also type in a book by using the space bar.) Output: ========= : A booklet containing the input book in the desired format. The format can be chosen by using the following command line options: : -outputBin: "FILE" : File that contains a set of two-page spreads, each page containing one page in the input book. The input file and output file are placed into the same directory. Optionally, you can tell Bookbind to take a sequence of the input book, and split it into a sequence of the output booklets, using the -all option. In this case, the output will be organized into a set of subdirectories, each with the name of the original input book (including the.txt extension), and each containing one booklet. : -all: "FILE" : File that contains a set of two-page spreads, each page containing one spread in the input book. The input file and output file are placed into the same directory. Optionally, you can tell Bookbind to take a sequence of the input book, and split it into a sequence of the output booklets, using the -all option. In this case, the output will be organized into a set of subdirectories, each with the name of the original input book (including the.txt extension), and each containing one booklet. (The above options are mutually exclusive.) Since the output is generated for you, you should include it in your make file. The makefile makes this easy: : .build-book-output: $(BOOKBIND) -all "$(BOOKBIND_BOOK_INPUT)" "$(BOOKBIND_BOOK_OUTPUT)" or .build-book-output: $(BOOKBIND) -outputBin="FILE" "$(BOOKBIND_BOOK_INPUT)" "$(BOOKBIND_BOOK_OUTPUT)" Note 1: ======== There are two kinds of input book format used by Bookbind: ASCII files and man pages. If you convert a book that contains the file type extension.txt, then the resulting booklet will contain ASCII 70238732e0 madden nfl 13 reloaded rar password
