What is Lisp? Lisp is an acronym that stands for “List Processing” software. It was developed in the early 1970s, and continues to be used in high-performance numerical applications. Today, Lisp is one of the oldest and most widely used programming languages in the world. Its simple syntax, easy to learn, and powerful list-processing capabilities make it perfect for engineering computer programs. What does it do? Lisp enables users to clean up sibilance problems that can occur during music production or recording. The plugin uses sibilance detection algorithms to automatically detect and lower the unpleasant “ss”, “teh” and “ch” sounds. It does so by tracking the amplitude and pitch in real-time. How does it work? Lisp automatically detects and lowers sibilance problems. It does so by using sibilance detection algorithms to track the amplitude and pitch in real-time. Main Features: Lisp is a De-esser plugin that automatically detects and lowers sibilance problems. How does it work? Lisp uses sibilance detection algorithms to track the amplitude and pitch in real-time. How to use it? Connect your audio interface, and load Lisp into your DAW. Lisp automatically detects and lowers sibilance problems. How to use it? Open the processing window, set the threshold, and press the start button. Lisp automatically detects and lowers sibilance problems. How to use it? Choose from three options: Lisp automatically detects and lowers sibilance problems. What else can you do with Lisp? Lisp offers a set of useful presets that you can use to automatically identify and clean up different types of sibilance problems. You can also create your own sibilance presets with the settings that you like most. How to use it? PRODUCT KEY VIEWER - Product Key Viewer is a very simple utility that automatically scans your computer and displays the product keys for any installed application, providing some other extra tools to help you manage the results. The application is extremely easy to use and the number one component that helps it target beginners and more experienced users alike is the minimal interface. The main window, with a basic appearance, displays the product name, information and data, which usually represents the product key retrieved from your computer. Of course, you first need to initiate a new scan that can take anywhere from a few seconds to a few minutes, depending on the number of apps installed on the system and the found product keys. Because managing these keys is pretty important for every single user, Product Key Viewer allows you to export the detected keys in HTML, Excel and TXT formats anywhere on the hard drive. Additionally, it provides you with possibilities to change owner and organization info, as well as to load keys from a second hard disk to be able to export them all at once. Obviously, you should have absolutely no trying to understand usage; in addition, it runs on low to next to zero resources. All things considered, this is one useful piece of software thanks to the fact that it detects product keys on your computer. It also allows you save the results in various formats, which makes it a keeper.
