Mutations in the HFE gene have been associated with hereditary spherocytosis. We have undertaken a search for HFE gene mutations in a series of patients with hereditary spherocytosis and low-grade reticulocytosis. DNA from 84 patients with hereditary spherocytosis, with or without low-grade reticulocytosis, was screened for HFE mutations by either automated DNA sequencing or restriction fragment length polymorphism analysis. We found one new mutation in five unrelated patients. Four of the five were homozygous for a 522-deIA mutation (splice site mutation) in exon 4, which is associated with hemochromatosis type 3. The fifth was a heterozygous compound heterozygote for the 522-deIA mutation and a previously described R46W mutation (codon 15). This series represents a previously unrecognized pattern of HFE gene mutations in hereditary spherocytosis and can serve as a reference for future mutation screening studies of HFE.Q: What part of the human body is 'just skin'? A friend of mine told me that the human body is just skin. She said that a lot of us only have skin and nothing else. While I have never heard this said before, I don't agree that the human body is only skin. For example, we have bones (and teeth, sinews, and soft tissue). We have blood vessels, intestines, and lungs. Our brains are made up of flesh, bone, and brain cells. Our skin is an organ, not just the outer layer of an animal. We are made up of more than just skin. Yet people
