“deserved” break this week? Not a chance. It took a few weeks for the common folks to figure out that the powers-that-be in Seattle sent a real message to all the grown-ups that don’t want to play nice anymore: We’re a small bunch of pinheads. And smallness is what matters. That message was delivered in the most curt and businesslike manner possible: According to The Stranger, a complacent press heard and got the news long before the public did: Less than 48 hours after Kevin Clark's declaration of "there are no replacement options available for me to call this an injury", the Seattle Mariners tweeted out this official list of 40 players on the disabled list. From the numbers alone, you can tell this is a list of all the names that were kept out of spring training (Jesse Fernandez, Jean Segura, and Zach Lee) as well as a couple more just to keep things exciting. Meanwhile, the only thing people are talking about is the Seattle Mariners, who apparently have the highest payroll in the majors and yet have the second smallest batting average in MLB. Pay no attention to the man behind the curtain! I mean, these are the same people who promised that it would be Steve King's turn this year. And this very week. It has been a weird week. Lefty, for example, has been biding his time in the minors since his tri-puple whammy last week. He was supposed to pitch today. Instead, he reports today that he has not pitched in a month and had his elbow surgically repaired this week. That's right: there's a good chance that King's entire 2013 season is over.

HERE'S How To Survive The Next Sexual ' We all know that sexual consent can take many forms but what does it mean if you're in the position of having to choose between a world of sexually frustrated men or a sexual paradise of open ended possibilities? Ladies, we're here to tell you exactly what to expect when you enter into sexual negotiations with a man. Here are a few basic ground rules for any situation that ends in a sexual encounter. 1. Do not share secrets The reasons this is a good policy to adhere to is that, as with any relationship, you want your sexual partner to treat you with respect and on the same level as yourself. Sharing any secrets that might weaken your position in the relationship can open you up to potential problems that you may not be able to fix before the situation escalates. 2. Get comfortable with wearing sexy underwear In this modern age, a lot of people don't think about what they're wearing. However, if you find yourself being pursued by a new sexual partner, there is a good chance that they will have some level of sexual activity in mind that might be more than a one night stand, you may have to prepare yourself for a longer term relationship. You should try to dress up in as sexy underwear as you can (there's a good chance that you already know this but the same goes for men), but remember, this is not always a good idea, especially if the guy you are currently dating is in the same situation and you are trying to cross him out for good. 3.

Communication is key Regardless of the situation you are faced with, it's a good idea to plan ahead before sex starts happening. If you are in a situation where you are being pursued by a man you're seeing and he's the one who brought the situation to the table, it is important to have a conversation about what to expect, and ask for specific details of what he's hoping to experience. You may not know what to expect and may feel that it doesn't matter, but if you realize that he is planning to take things slow with you, you will be surprised by how many levels of communication you're already missing, and how happy you are to get it back. 4. Pick the safe route Generally speaking, there are many opportunities where, in theory, you can make things
