For example: `$input = ['company_name' =>'something']; return $this->validate($input, ['company_name' => 'between:|something', 'company_short_name' => 'between:|something' ])`; The validation works fine as it should, but only when I send it from my form. I'm using a `$request` variable to get my values from the form, which is from my website. Then I must construct the validation with those values instead of in the above case. At the moment I'm doing this to convert the rule: `$request = request()->input(); if ($request->has('company_name') || $request->has('company_short_name')) { $input = [ 'company_name' => $request->company_name, 'company_short_name' => $request->company_short_name, ]; } else { $input = ['company_name' =>'something', 'company_short_name' =>'something']; } return $this->validate($input, [ 'company`
