The present invention relates to cooking vessels having bimetallic plates for cooking food

within the vessel, and more particularly to a device which permits automatic regulation of the temperature of the bimetallic plates. It is known to provide a bimetallic cooking vessel having a container which is open at the top and a bimetallic cooking plate at the bottom of the container. A gap is provided between the bimetallic cooking plate and the bottom of the container in order to allow circulation of air through the container. A heating element is usually arranged within the container and is adapted to be energized by means of a thermostat in response to the detection of a preselected temperature within the container, usually in the form of a preselected
