And.Q: Data out of bound exception when converting between float and Integer in C# I'm trying to convert between float and Integer using the ToString() method, but it's throwing an out of bounds exception. What I'm trying to do is this: `int i = (int) i / 1000f;` and i gets a `DataOutOfRangeException`. So I tested by replacing the integer with the following code: `int i = (int) i / 1;` and it works without an exception, but I still want to use the original code above. How do I do this? A: Floating point representations of floating point numbers can be lossy. Something like: `double d = 123.456; int i = (int)d / 1000;` may be NaN or something other than an exact decimal representation of 123456. In general: `double d = 123.456; int i = (int)d;` will not work reliably. See: If you want a more practical solution... `int i =`

Math.Floor(123.456 * 1000); A: Do this: int i = (int) Math.Ceiling(i / 1000f
