Every person uses Photoshop, whether they are an average user or a professional. Photoshop is a very powerful tool and an essential part of any graphic designer. Photoshop allows you to resize images and add layers and filters to create new designs. You can also modify colors, patterns and shadows. But Photoshop is a very powerful and resource-heavy program with a very advanced and sometimes complicated user interface. This has led to Photoshop becoming the butt of jokes. We're taking a look at the 10 most hilarious Photoshop memes. The first Photoshop meme on this list is the famed "fat lady" Photoshop. It involves editing a photo of a woman so that she appears much thinner. "The most popular Photoshop fat lady is, undoubtedly, the women of the 2009 New York Times wedding photography contest with designers 'Cindy Keneally' and 'Sharon Redd.'" — Geek Art "She is one of the most popular Photoshop memes that has been used on hundreds of images. She is a popular character on forums such as the Verge, Reddit and even the Serebii forums." — TattooGents The next Photoshop meme on this list is of the mysterious "Moderator." This Photoshop meme is about getting rid of a common editing feature. "This is a photographer's Photoshop: it's used when some feature (say, exposure) is changed, and the image turns out different. This is due to a certain limitation of RAW processing, the camera has information in multiple-aperture. A moderator is an engineer who manually has to know which is correct, and the image stabilizes after that step. It's funny to see people asking 'WTF, how the hell did this happen?'" The next Photoshop meme is of a character being manipulated into looking like a cat. "Much like a cat, the user manipulates the image with the desired effect." — Sandbox "In Photoshop there are a variety of ways to change an image. In this case Photoshop has changed the image into a cat's face." — ZaphodSP The next Photoshop meme on this list is of a photographer's Photoshop work. "This is no ordinary Photoshop. Effect of tetrachloroplatinate(II) and monocyclohexyldichloroplatinate(II) on murine neuroblastoma cells. Tetrachloroplatinate(II) (TCPP) and monocyclohexyldichloroplatinate(II) (MHCP) were investigated on cells of neuroblastoma, a neural tumor of mice. The effects of these drugs were studied in cell culture, using cytological and cytobiochemical methods. MHCP was relatively toxic in contrast to TCPP, which did not inhibit cell growth. The numbers of undifferentiated neuroblasts, traced with the antineural specific protein C-28 N, were increased by both drugs with a dose-response relationship. The mechanism of action of the drugs is discussed with special regard to the effects of these agents in relation to the hormonal control of neuroblast proliferation in the mouse.Enhancing dopamine signaling in Parkinson's disease. While dopamine agonists can be effective therapy for the cardinal motor features of Parkinson's disease (PD), the hypoactivity of dopamine (DA) neurons in the substantia nigra pars compacta (SNc) limits their clinical usefulness. SNc DA neurons produce and release dopamine into the striatum in quantities sufficient to stimulate all the subtypes of the striatal dopamine receptor family. Receptor-mediated autocrine and paracrine processes account for the considerable diversity of striatal responses that can be elicited by selective activation of striatal DA receptors. By'smart neuron' amplification of signaling from individual DA nerve terminals, DA neurons exhibit increased sensitivity to ambient DA concentrations and modulate the amplifications in response to synaptic input. The central and peripheral mechanisms involved in the formation of these amplified signals and their regulation are discussed.You are here You are here University of St. Thomas School of Law The University of St. Thomas School of Law in Houston is ranked by U.S. News & World Report, also appearing in the Top 5 of the Best Law Schools lists produced by The Law School Directory in 2011, 2013, and 2014. Tepidus Tepidus, or Tepityus (, ; fl. 2nd century BC), was a Greek statesman and diplomat of the 2nd century BC. He was a Theban general and son-in-law of the King of Egypt Ptolemy VII and brother-in-law to Ptolemy VIII. He became a diplomatic envoy to Rome and traveled there to negotiate a treaty of friendship and alliance between the Ptolemaic Empire and the Roman Republic. According to Plutarch, Tepidus was Theban at the time of the Battle of Raphia, when Ptolemy I's son Ptolemy II Philadelphus defeated the armies of Macedonia. It is thought that Tepidus was forced to remain in Macedonia as a captive. Biography Tepidus was sent in 192 by Ptolemy VII to Rome on a mission to the Roman Republic. He arrived in Rome accompanied by a Roman delegation, on 1 August 192 BC, and proclaimed himself as an ambassador from Egypt. According to Plutarch, Tepidus was acting on behalf of his brother-in-law Ptolemy VIII. Rome regarded Egypt as a key ally in its struggle with the Aetolian League in central Greece, which was allied with Macedon. In the late summer of 193, Ptolemy VIII sent Tepidus to Verres, the governor of Sicily, to seize grain ships. Tepidus performed this task himself, arranging a competitive bidding for the grain ships among Sicilian temples; this transaction earned Tepidus the enmity of Rome for a time. In late 192 BC, the Roman Senate proposed to give the king one million drachmas in compensation for the proposed contract, but Ptolemy VIII refused to accept the sum. According to Strabo, Ptolemy VIII was convinced that he would be able to reach a better agreement by forcing Tepidus to return to Egypt. After the mission to Rome failed, Tepidus was sent on another diplomatic mission to Italy by Ptolemy VIII, who also sent a number of men, including Paulus to Tiberius. Tiberius sent him out from the harbor at Brundisium, where he disembarked and went back to Egypt. No other details are known about this trip and it is not known whether Tep
