The php file is called: prepare("SELECT name, role, department, fax, cell, id FROM staff_info WHERE (department =? AND staff_id =?);");?> bind_param("ssi", $department, $staffId);?> The problem I have is I am concerned that the database connection may not be setup correctly. So I am trying to make sure the staffId gets escaped and the query is correct: $staffId = mysql_real_escape_string($staffId); $stmt->bind_param("ssi", $department, $staffId); Am I doing this right? I had just been using $_POST['staffId'], but wanted to make sure. Thanks A: This doesn't work the way you are using it. Followers Tuesday, February 13, 2013 After seeing the movie Rock of Ages, I'd guess that they need to cast this guy to play the role in my mind: And I was rather excited when watching The Elf on the Shelf again tonight. What brings this about is that I actually read a nice little book called The Elf (based on the Elf on the Shelf) and I think that book and movie are really quite good - at least how they bring it to life was compelling and pleasant. I highly recommend it. A movie based on this book with Alec Baldwin as the elf was out in 2008 so it could well be that they have made some changes to the elf then since that time - that is if the movie will be updated at all. HOWEVER, what got me interested in this was stumbling across this animated short that really looked like it could almost be that portrayal that I just described above (albeit retaining a lot of the peculiar edits and inaccuracies that might be found with an adaptation). Call it a case of what I call "the mono-brow": it was googled and a few folks came up with this link to clipart. So not mine. Now, can I, in all honesty, just on a whim, say that this is a more accurately portrayal of the Elf? I would say that's certainly the case. I mean people have highlighted the head as well. So you can decide for yourself - here is some more proof for ye or the nay (and perhaps hence for me). I have now found a book that capitalizes on this public image of the Christmas elf. "Conner collects the words of 17,000 elves and pickles them for later use. But Connor keeps missing words during spell-casting and is kicking himself when his elf, Mary Lee, shows up with a brand new notebook. "The book called Elf," says Mary Lee in the best possible way. It isn't the first Christmas-themed book out there, but it is the first that rocks....The writing is full of word play, like "Seeing's believing," "Frelentlessly pursued," and "Misty rain
