Migrants who are detained in the U.S. and sent back to Mexico to wait for their deportation proceedings cannot be lawfully held in U.S. immigration detention centers in the United States for more than 48 hours, according to a federal judge in New Orleans. The ruling on Monday was a victory for a woman known as Jane Doe, who in 2011 had been apprehended trying to cross the border from Mexico into Arizona. She was arrested and jailed, then transferred to federal immigration detention in Texas. Judge Sarah Vance of Federal District Court in New Orleans found that Ms. Doe was held for 44 hours after her transfer to Texas, in violation of the law that limits the detention of migrants to a maximum of 48 hours. She also ruled that the government did not meet its burden of proving that Ms. Doe would not face dangers or risks during the transfer, as required by a federal policy that has been upheld by lower courts.

This Friday, the Eagles hold a training camp scrimmage between their rookie and veteran camp squads. The scrimmage is always good for a few plays of highlights and one particular play that stands out above the rest. From the NFL.com report on the practice: General manager Howie Roseman is scheduled to be on the field for this week's live scrimmage. Howie said last week that Roseman will be making some "behind-the-scenes" calls on the play of the Eagles rookie quarterbacks. There will be a brief window when fans will have a chance to catch a glimpse of Roseman with his hands on his hips and thumbs up, and that image is a photo many NFL fans wish they could take themselves. I can't wait to hear what Roseman has to say about the play, but what the heck is it?
