Share this post Link to post Share on other sites peter jackson 28 peter jackson 28 As man is the most evil animal, their actions caused the second ice age which in turn caused the extinction of the dinosaurs. Terrible... was that all they did, just "cause they could"?... has this got anything to do with "the most stupid" of all animals? 2

Share this post Link to post Share on other sites AnimalTurp 0 AnimalTurp 0 I would say it is the most stupid but they are much more creative and much more intelligent than us. 2 Share this post Link to post Share on other sites peter jackson 28 peter jackson 28 If we still, by some miracle have survived another ice age then it's all going to be okay. One day, humans will make it off this planet and we will wipe out the bears. Bear hunting, exterminating bears... the very worst of our species... beating bears to death with sticks... thinking it's fun to beat them to death with sticks... is this the reason why we are having such problems now? 2 Share this post Link to post Share on other sites AnimalTurp 0 AnimalTurp 0 And one more thing, we have lived through that 2nd ice age, we may not have been able to wipe out the bears, but we may have wiped out the dinosaurs. There is no evidence of a mammals/dino extinction event happening around that time, it was probably just as bad as the one that is happening now, if we don't try and stop it. 3 Share this post Link to post Share on other sites peter jackson 28 peter jackson 28 peter jackson 28 Pete it was a little after that, it was about 65 million years ago. Still not as bad as the current one. The time machine thing, according to most scientists did not happen until 5 million years ago, so a bit before the dinosaurs. 2 Share this post Link to post Share on other sites Elcon 0 Elcon 0 I would say it is the most stupid but they are much species This FAQ entry should help answer questions on endangered species and how you can help them. Several organizations such as the Marine Mammals Project, HSUS, the International Fund for Animal Welfare (IFAW), the World Wildlife Fund, Whale and Dolphin Conservation, and more are actively seeking to help species such as elephants, rhinos, pandas, sharks, and manatees that are in imminent danger of extinction.

These organizations are helping to raise awareness of the issue and are providing education to the public by way of film, photo galleries, and other creative pieces. They are actively working on the issue and seeking action from governments. Please help them by making a donation to one of these organizations. Most of the animal populations that are in danger of extinction are found in Asia and Africa, and include elephants, rhinos, manatees, and sharks. These species are becoming very valuable, and with the increase in tourist revenue they bring in, the protection of these species becomes more critical. A successful conservation program would involve the following: As you see, animal species need increased awareness about the issue. This includes a) raising sufficient awareness for people to be aware that these species are in danger of extinction. b) effective messages about their threats c) making people think about the value of these animals d) action by governments to prevent the threats e) action by the public to make sure that their governments and organizations do the same Information about Other Species There are other species out there that are also in danger of extinction, but are either less well known or do not necessarily produce the same amount of revenue. Species such as the elephant, the silk worm, the giraffe, the manatee, the pangolin, manatees, mammoths, giant squid, giant leatherback turtle, krill, tigers, and the porpoise (dolphins) are just a few of many that have noticed a steady decline in their numbers. How to Help in Species Conservation There are different things that you can do to help, and there are different kinds of species that need help (bigger problem).

Biggest Problem Most Popular Most Important Depending on what issue it is, this can vary a lot. Saving a species by helping its population grow is always important, and if you can help the species stay in the environment in which it was born and raised,
