The HyperMotion technology is designed to make the game more realistic and physical, and to provide a fresh, more engaging experience for players. It also provides more freedom in creating new player types and AI behaviors, as well as more refined collision physics. A new Soccer AI suite powers gameplay on both professional players and the AI bots that power multiplayer modes, with each behavior programmed to react intelligently to play against either human or AI opponents. Real Player Expectations We've taken the ability to create detailed, accurate player models to the next level with more specific individual characteristics and new performance styles. By applying even more meaningful biomechanics to players, we believe this will result in a more realistic experience for players, enhanced player animations, even more dynamic and intuitive controls, and more controls for players to express their vision and skills. Precision Player Instinct Previous games based on FIFA simulation technology have lacked the level of consistency, precision and realism of player movement. To address these issues, new controls and gameplay mechanics have been added to enhance this through more natural and responsive movements, feet, and ball control for players. Improved Movement and Maneuvering We're using the recent advances in computer graphics to create more realistic movement animations. While players still move naturally, we've added more responsive movements, a more realistic feel, improved controls for players, and reduced the speed of turns and acceleration and deceleration. Improved Player Awareness From ball skills, to managing space, positioning, and awareness, players will have a heightened sense of awareness when playing the game. We've added new, more intelligent AI behaviors and new decisions that players make in the game. Refined Player Intelligence We've included more detailed reasoning, making it possible for players to create more convincing set pieces, for example, in the run-up to a shot, and for players to more naturally use the ball. Improved Player Interactions We've added more controls for players, including a refined sense of passing and shooting accuracy and more intuitive controls such as foot control, ball control, and ball direction. Improved Player Models We're using our advanced human anatomy modeling to provide more physically correct models for players. For example, players now look more natural in their movements, with more responsive, solid and detailed joints. The animation of pass creation

It is a member of the microphthalmia-associated transcription factor (Mitf) gene family. Mitf exists in the form of an 828 amino acid protein, which contains a RING finger domain within its amino terminus and the C-terminus is composed of a basic helix-loop-helix domain. Mitf has been used as a model to study the development of melanocyte lineage cells. Function Mitf is a basic helix-loop-helix transcription factor which regulates melanocyte-specific gene transcription. It controls pigmentation through binding to the promoter region of the melanocyte-specific Pmel gene. Pigmentation is a physiological process that begins with production of a proopiomelanocortin (POMC) containing precursor protein in the zona compacta of the adrenal gland. POMC is then cleaved to give rise to adrenocorticotrophic hormone (ACTH) and beta-endorphin. ACTH then binds to its specific receptors on melanocytes to induce melanin synthesis, thus lightening the skin. Expression Mitf is expressed throughout the central nervous system, including the dorsal root ganglion, the cranial sensory ganglia, and the spinal cord. It is also expressed in the adrenal, in granular convoluted tubules of the kidney, and in non-neuronal tissues such as the thyroid, the testis, and the placenta. It is also expressed in the outer layer of the inner circle of the cornea. Localization
