I have a few theories: A natural English adjective created from the Latin exotica, meaning strange or unknown (like "Arabian" or "Byzantine") An old English word used to mean "savage" (like "the savage Scots") A fictional word made up for a fictitious person or place (like "ex-quisite", "Ex-tortionist" or "Ex-allomantic") The non-English person who wrote the Latin Anyone here have a different theory? A: I've done some research on the subject. For the past few years it has seemed to be a common confusion between the word "exotic" and the word "exotica." As a result, there have been more than a few mis-translations of
