On March 1st, the world's biggest crypto exchange, Binance announced that it will be supporting the Ethereum-based stablecoin, DAI. Users are now able to deposit ETH to their accounts and purchase DAI. Buyers can also purchase ETH with DAI and send it to other Ethereum addresses. DAI is pegged to the US dollar, so it's not really a stablecoin per se. Still, it's easier for people to understand than most stablecoins, and this is good for Ethereum adoption. Many of the exchange platforms on which Ethereum operates don't have any ETH-based stablecoin option. As for how the DAI coin is made, Binance explains: This is how Binance will be backing up the value of DAI : We will keep a cryptocurrency reserve of 1% of US dollar holdings on Binance, and keep this currency under daily USD trading volume limits at any time. This is only possible due to our high-performance and ultra-low latency matching engine. This currency will be used for all DAI redemption requests. Each redemption request has a price limit, and we take every step possible to ensure that this is respected. As the majority of Ethereum users already have an ETH wallet, the issuance of DAI will be easy. Still, I'm not sure it's wise for the folks on Binance to issue DAI on their platform. If the Binance customer loses $1 billion during the time of the redemptions, their platform still has $1 billion in ETH, but, of course, there's no corresponding amount of DAI. This is very similar to what happens to Bitcoin wallets when there are large amounts of stolen Bitcoin in the blockchain. Expression of the ras oncogene in non-small cell lung cancer and its clinical relevance to prognosis. The oncogenic ras gene is commonly detected in a wide variety of human tumours but its significance in non-small cell lung cancer (NSCLC) has not been clearly defined. We studied the expression of ras in 46 NSCLC cases and correlated it with clinicopathological parameters. The positivity for ras p21 was found to correlate
