Ranges in common practice, Strasinger recommends that a urine sample be collected from the patient, and up to 1 mL of blood be collected from the arm. She notes that the blood can be drawn as long as the patient is ambulatory, although the long arm may cause anxiety for the patient. The blood is refrigerated for up to 4 hr before processing. For Urinalysis, fluid from the bladder should be collected and aliquoted into a sampling tube. For the strains of S. aureus included in the study, the most inhibitory dilution of broth was 1:20 or 1:40. The highest concentration to have no growth was found to be 1:80. For P. aeruginosa, C. albicans, C. glabrata, C. krusei, and C. neoformans, the corresponding dilutions for inhibition of growth were 1:40, 1:10, 1:20, 1:20, and 1:10, respectively. For C. albicans, C. glabrata, and C. krusei, turbidity, color, and size of the inoculum were evaluated. Gerber, Weinmann; Fullagar, Frederick M; Piotrowski, Michael; Shapiro, Helen. Urinalysis.
