XChat is a multi-protocol IRC client designed especially for nix and Unix. SnapDNS is a free service that automatically updates the domain names listed on your browser's address bar when you visit a new website. For example, if you connect to a website such as Dropbox, your browser will get the URL of the site correctly. However, you will not be able to see it unless the server that you are connecting to is configured to use SnapDNS. SnapDNS is entirely free for personal use. However, if your site is accepting donations, you may want to evaluate our premium subscription called "SnapDNS Pro". SnapDNS is powered by RainLoop. RainLoop customers get the best value for money. If you're already paying for RainLoop and want to use SnapDNS for free, just contact us at sales@rainloop.com and we can set it up for you. Openfire is an open source instant messaging server, similar to IRC. You can set it up to provide peer-to-peer instant messaging. Openfire is designed to be an alternative to proprietary systems such as AOL Instant Messenger or Yahoo! Messenger and to provide a better experience for instant messaging on the Internet. Requirements To install Openfire: Download a JAR file from the Openfire download page for your preferred Java version Download the JAR file into the directory where your Java download is placed Execute the following command: java -jar [JAR FILE] Windows users should execute the following commands: C:\bin> set CLASSPATH=.; C:\bin> set CLASSPATH=.; C:\bin> set PATH=%PATH%;C:\bin Linux users should execute the following commands: export PATH=/opt/openfire/lib; /opt/openfire/bin/openfire This will enable Openfire to find the JDK. Installing the Openfire Server Openfire will need to be installed on every computer that will use it. It will not do any harm to the computer, but it may take up some disk space. The following command can be used to install the server: nohup java -cp /usr/share/openfire/lib/:/opt/openfire/lib/*:/opt/open
