I have an R script with a function that returns a table of results. What is the best way to use this table in a bash script? A: Use a pipe like this: ./rscript |./bashscript.sh This of course is a simplified way of doing it. Also note the single and double quotes. the interstate transfer doctrine apply only when there is a clearly defined relevant market in which the seller and buyer are competitors. Id. at 426-27. See also Overstreet v. North Shore Corp., 318 N.W.2d 126, 137 (S.D.1982) (Fosheim, J., dissenting) (the "transfer of the contract of sale of motor homes from sellers to retail dealers is an intermediate sale, and it is not a sale of the motor homes to the public at large"). Under these circumstances, we conclude the trial court did not err in holding the plaintiffs had no claim for "lost profits" under the "transportation market" theory. CONCLUSION [¶ 31.] We hold the trial court correctly ruled that SDCL 57A-2-715(1) allows a buyer to revoke its acceptance

The present invention relates to a motorcycle front fender assembly. FIGS. 1 and 2 are views of the conventional motorcycle fender assembly A. The motorcycle fender assembly A is a subassembly of a motorcycle and includes a fender 10, a fender stay 11 and a fender clip 12 which connect the fender 10 and the fender stay 11 together, and are firmly fixed to each other. A cylindrical gutter portion 14 is provided in the fender stay 11. A front wheel 16 is received within a wheel receiving chamber 11A of the fender stay 11 and is rotationally connected to the fender stay 11 through a front wheel axle 17, a bushing 18 and the front wheel 16. However, the rider of the motorcycle often directly hits the front wheel 16 against an obstacle, such as a curbstone. Thus, the front wheel 16 may be bent by repeatedly hitting the curbstone. Q: Rotate to a new Quadrant of a Bounding Box in R Is there a function in R that can rotate all of the points in a bounding box? For example, say I have a box defined as $bx1 = c(-300,-100,-100,0,-300)$ $bx2 = c(300,-100,-100,0)$ $1cdb36666d$

This is a vst for Adobe . Freeware Windows Vista, Windows 7, Windows 8, Windows 10 Setup. If .Q: What are the virtues of Strong and Weak Personal Points in print-and-play games? In a discussion of the desire to introduce a second character class for duelists in print-and-play games, it was mentioned that I should provide some rationale as to why Strong and Weak Personal Points are a good addition to the game. So, a couple of questions: 1. Why is a character's value (or lack thereof) in terms of PPs sometimes more critical than other mechanics (fraying, sneaking, etc.) to how a game plays out? 2. How does introducing a second character class benefit the overall goal of a player-driven game? A: You can use values for a number of reasons. When you are doing a scenario, or a campaign within a setting, you can use them to set the tone and give context. In a one-shot or a game with a small group of players, you can use them as a way of flavor. When you are play-testing an idea, you can use them to ratchet it up to a higher level if things are going too smoothly. For Player Controlled Games Personal Points are useful when you are creating a conflict between characters and they are easy to keep track of and easier to adjust. They also help to give your characters a more human-scale value. For example, a character in a DnD campaign with three level 1 characters running around who are not doing much could have a score of 7 (1 PP from each of their class abilities + 1 for Skill). With a second character, you can take that number and adjust it to be a more meaningful number. If you have a character with a single class that is very powerful, for example a cleric or paladin, they are immune to certain class abilities and attack styles so you need to find a way to make that character even more important. The cleric would benefit from a "Strength of God" ability, allowing them to ignore bleeding for the first 5 points of damage. This would require a little more nerfing on the player's part as the cleric would now have little defense for their lack of combat prowess. The cleric could either get a weaker class ability that still benefits them from the bleeding (unfortunately the "Strength of God" ability is not often useful),
