A: The short answer: use an array for attributes. To expand on the short answer: With a Backbone model, you have: The attributes property on your model, which is a JS array A "default" attribute if no attributes are specified in a fetch() call So, with a model that looks like this: var User = Backbone.Model.extend({ defaults: { username: "", email: "" }, initialize: function() { this.on('change', this.render); }, url: '/accounts/me', defaults: { username:
