We publish and archive raw data and methodology on all our experiments and results. We give ongoing public discussion forums for our research, and we submit our studies to peer-reviewed journals. When I began my current job in 2017, there was a call for a new body to provide guidelines and standards on open-source scientific publishing. We established the Open Science Initiative in the US, and my colleague Douglas MacLean recently reached out to colleagues around the world to create a global version of our initiative. I support the goals of this work, and the call for action. I'm
